The event of the afternoon was the competitive drill for the splendid prize offered by Coeur de Lion Commandery. The prize is a handsome Templar sword which cost $150. The sheath is gold-plated and bears in carving and relief the emblems of the order. The hilt is the image of a Knight, and this with the guard and blade, forms a Templar's cross. The blade is of the finest steel and is etched in emblematic figures. This beautiful prize was open to be compresed. This beautiful prize was open to be competed for by all the Commanderies in the State, but only two entered the lists. These were Nashville Commandery, No. 1, and Memphis, No. 4. The drill continued for about wo hours, the time being equally divided

There were twenty Knights of this Commandery in the ranks, and for an hour they performed the evolutions without a single mistake and with few breaks in the accuracy and precision of their movements. They had been well drilled and had evidently come to Knoxville with the intention of carrying off the prize. The greater number of them were middle-aged men, and they carried themselves like veterans. Cheer after cheer went up from the immense crowd of spectators at the performance of each diffi-cult movement. These Knights should be
